CAL TEAMS TO MEET THURSDAY IN GRID GAMES

BERKELEY, Dec. 4.—With the intramural football championship of the University of California at stake, amateur traveristy and non-organ... on eleven will clash on the greenward of Memorial Stadium next Thursday afternoon, December 7. The game, starting at 3:30 o'clock, will be open to the public without charge. The two all-star teams, representing the cream of more than 450 men who played on the intramural squad in two leagues, American (non-organization) and National (travertisty), were selected by vote of the team managers at a meeting last week. The winner of Thursday's game will be awarded a handsome silver trophy, emblematic of the University championship, which will be placed in the California Gymnasium trophy case until the championship is again held next fall. The trophy was contributed by members of the faculty and others interested in the development of the intramural football program, which was instituted this fall under the direction of L. B. "Stub" Allison, assistant varsity grid coach and A. S. U. C. director of intramural sports. The championship contest will be put on with as much of the color of an intercollegiate game as possible, with rival rooting sections and, if possible, the A. S. U. C. band on deck to encourage the teams. The National league all-stars will appear in white jerseys, while their rivals of the American league will wear blue uniforms.

St. Marys Grid Team in Break With Bronchos

SANTA CLARA, Dec. 4.—UP.—All athletic relations between Santa Clara university and St. Mary's college of Moraga were terminated today by the former institution. James J. Lyons, S. J., president of Santa Clara, announced the break, which climaxed a series of unpleasant actions and remarks extending over several years. The Santa Clara board of control acted on the recommendation of Father Lyons. The bitterly-fought 6 to 6 game played by the rival teams November 19 precipitated the break. At conclusion of the game the players fought for possession of the football, as a trophy. Captain A. Dowd of Santa Clara obtained it after several hundred spectators and students had exchanged blows. "Diamond Joe" Paglia, ace full-back of Santa Clara, was injured in the game. Two years ago Paglia and Vin O'Donnell, Santa Clara halfback, were seriously hurt in the St. Mary's game. A San Francisco sportswriter quoted Maurice (Clipper) Smith as saying, after this season's game: "What gets me down is that St. Mary's lays for these kids every year and they get away with murder. The officials just don't seem to see it." The St. Mary's athletic board of control immediately demanded top then ended all sports contact, an apology from Smith, who de-petition between the old rivals. Mary's refused to accept his de-coach Edward P. (Slip) Madier known that Santa Clara might beathletic, were in Los Angeles toers fought for possession of the

DRY LAW TO BE USHERED OUT TODAY

By UNITED PRESS
Old John Barleycorn, buried in 1906, will be brought back to life in 20 states today.

The action of Utah, where a state convention is expected to ratify repeal this afternoon, will be the means of ending the 13 year experiment in curbing liquor traffic.

By the end of the year or soon thereafter, as many as a half dozen more states may join the list of those where strong spirits may be purchased legally. It is doubtful for the immediate present, at least, if more than half the states will admit John Barleycorn to citizenship.

In the states where legal sale is permitted, the old fashioned, wide open license saloon has not been brought back into being.

SALT LAKE CITY, Dec. 4.—(UP)—Possibility that prohibition won't be repealed until tomorrow night has been known when the United Press learned that 9 of the 21 convention delegates in Utah favor meeting scheduled at noon, and then adjourning until around 7 P. M. on Monday standard time.

Should the group succeed in convincing two more delegates to their cause the actual ballot, marking the end of the 18th amendment for all states, would be delayed by several hours.

Utah, on a basis of convention fees set in other states will be the 36th state to ratify the 21st amendment.

Durance Banberger, commander of "The Crusaders" and a delegate, said it was his "understanding that a prolonged recess might be taken."

It was understood the motive behind the delay was to permit a radio club to broadcast the proceedings during a half hour available at noon, but not during afternoon.

As P. I. Jackson of Richmond received word of the death of his mother, Mrs. W. H. Mansfield of Bedford, Pa.

SILENT LINDBERGH

Here is another Lindbergh story from Paris which is going the rounds of the Diplomatic Corps. It happened at the dinner given to the flying Colonel by French Air Minister Pierre Cot.

When the champagne was served, Lindbergh dropped his usual abstinence and followed his wife's example in joining the toasts. The Colonel left in fine fettle, and as they said goodbye to their host, Mrs. Lindbergh whispered to M. Cot:

CARDS TO MEET WITH COLUMBIA

PASADENA, Dec. 4.—(UP)—Columbia university and Stanford university will meet here New year's Eve in the annual inter-collegiate football game of the Tournament of Roses.

Announcement that the Lions had been invited to represent the east and had accepted was made today by Al Masters, graduate manager at Stanford.

This was according to the customary procedure under which tournament officials invite the western representative and the eastern team in turn, selects its Eastern opponent.

The selection of Coach Lou Little's strong team promised another brilliant contest to add to the Rose Bowl tradition.

Columbia was the outstanding team in the east able to accept the nomination. Princeton, the only undefeated major eleven, was prevented by a "Big Three" ruling against post-season games, the same bar which was faced by Michigan in the Big Ten.

Army, given serious consideration until defeated by Notre Dame last Saturday, apparently eliminated itself when West Point authorities frowned on prolonging their gridiron season. Duke and Nebraska also were considered.

Stanford was one of the best, it met the best team on the Pacific coast this year. Columbia made an impressive record in the East.

The Indians, working under Claude (Tiny) Thornhill in his first year of the Pacific Coast conference.

They lost only to Washington, 6 to 0, on two field goals made by Bill Smith, all-America end. Altogether, they scored brilliant wins over their two greatest rivals, California and Southern California.

Columbia, at the same time, was enjoying one of its best seasons in years, losing only to Princeton and winning all other games.

Stanford long has been a Rose Bowl favorite.

Its team, in fact, played in the first Tournament of Roses game, the forerunner of the modern series. In that contest it met and went down to inglorious defeat before the Michigan team that started the great Willie Heston. That was in 1902 and the score of the game was 19 to 0.

From that time until 1916 there were no football contests at the Tournament of Roses.

Stanford next was a Rose Bowl contestant in 1925 when, under Glenn (Pop) Warner, it met Notre Dame, coached by Knute Rockne.

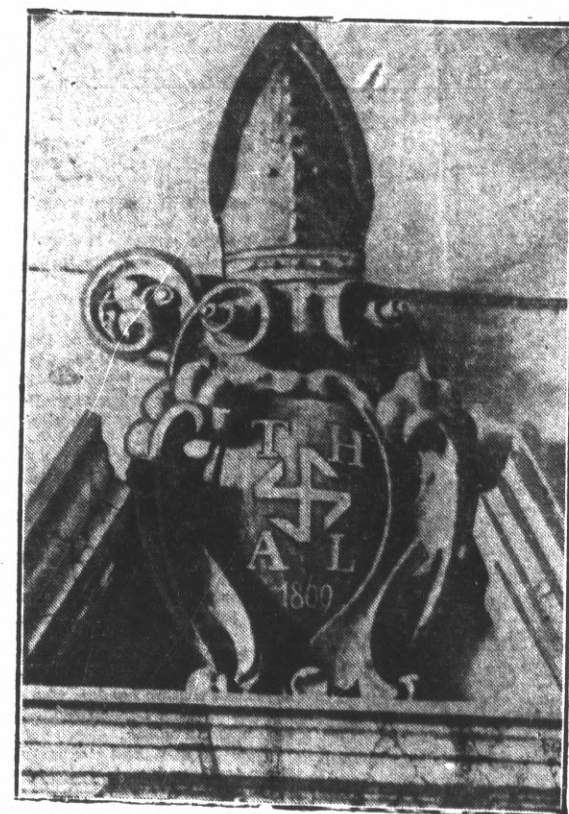

Ernie Nevers, one of the all-time greats of football history, was the star of that Stanford team. Opposed to him were the Four Horsemen who rode to fame for Notre Dame. Notre Dame won 27 to 10, but Nevers was the greatest star on the field that day.

Stanford again represented the West in 1927 when it tied with Alabama, 7 to 7, and again in 1928 when it beat Pitt, 7 to 6.

Speaking Of Sports

FORT WORTH, Tex., Dec. 4.—(UP)—Legalizing betting on horse racing is catching on rapidly in the Lone Star State.

Success of the recent 21-day Arlington Downs meet, which saw a $2,755,335 turnover in the pari-mutuels, is furnishing the stimulus. Other meets and other tracks now are in prospect.

The second racing event in the state since betting was legalized last spring opened Thanksgiving Day at Epsom Downs, at Houston. Its opening date was slightly over a month after the close of the Arlington Downs races, Nov. 11.

San Antonio Plans Track
An order also has been issued for preparation of the state fair race track at Dallas for possible use next year. At San Antonio, there is a movement to establish a track in that city.

In addition, the Arlington Downs track already has announced a meet for next spring, from March 29 to April 21, another 21 day event. The management, encouraged by the large crowds which saw its fall meet, is raising the price of its purses for the spring meet and is offering a $10,000 added purse for the feature race, the Texas Derby. The minimum purses probably will be around $70 to $80.

Average attendance at the meet was 9,000 daily, with its largest day attracting 35,000, which overflowed the stands and grounds. The track and stand both are being extended.

Derby Training Ground
Owners of the Arlington track hope to make it a training ground for the Kentucky Derby and Eastern tracks. The spring meet will come between the New Orleans spring events and the Kentucky Derby.

Announcement of the spring Arlington meet also inaugurates a program for semi-annual races at the track.

The governor's step in naming Guy T. Wagoner, who with his father and brother own the Arlington track, as State Racing Commissioner is heralded in sporting circles as a great step toward putting Texas racing on a par with the best in the nation.

Sportsmen to Name Officers At Next Meet

Nomination of officers was held last evening when the Richmond Sportsmen's club held its meeting at Brotherhood hall.

Final nomination and election will be held by the group on the next meeting night.

Bill Fawcett was awarded a reel by the club for catching the largest fish during November. Fawcett landed a 10 pound bass.

A number of members plan to compete in the bass derby next Sunday at Rio Vista.

D. S. Delaney presided last night.

SUGGESTIONS FOR HOSPITAL CHANGES MADE

MARTINEZ, Dec. 4.—Changes and improvements in the county hospital are recommended in a report filed by the grand jury hospital committee with the board of supervisors today.

The committee said it believed sanitary conditions should be improved at the hospital, and that some plumbing work is necessary. It recommended that the railing on the porch of the top floor be repaired and that the board appoint a man to check all supplies delivered to the hospital. The board recently named W. H. Hough to such duties.

It also reported that the basement was found in a disorderly condition. The committee expressed confidence, however, that Oscar Olsson, new superintendent, would correct this condition as soon as possible.

Hollywood Film Shop

HOLLYWOOD, Dec. 4—UP—Diamonds, Russian rubles and foreign motors fell far short of being the treasured possessions of film bandits.

In most instances, it is some little trinket surrounded by a halo of memories or endowed, in the owner's mind, with some special magic which makes it a good luck omen.

Dolores Del Rio, as an example, treasures a miniature of her mother as a baby. Framed in dull gold, the likeness of this little child stands on a table beside Dolores' bed at night, as carried to her dressing room in the daytime and is packed in her baggage when traveling.

Dolores will tell you the miniature is a talisman that guards her from all evil and brings good luck.

Elissa Landi's good luck charm is an intaglio ring dating back to 900 B. C. It carries the mythical design of Apollo and was made by the ancient process which causes it to glow inside as it is lighted by fire. No moderns have solved the secret of this process.

Little Jean Parker prizes most a small cross studded with rubies and diamonds. It was bestowed upon her great-grandfather by a member of the ruling house of Poland—that's when Poland had a ruling house—as a recognition of bravery.

A 200 year-old Chinese mandarin coat is Helen Chandler's most valued possession. Helen has a habit of losing most of the things she owns, and proof of her devotion to the coat is demonstrated by the fact she has kept it clean years.

The wrap is fashioned in peacock blue, embroidered in yellow and lined with jade green. Helen liked it at first just for its looks but later she began associating it with her rise in the cinema world. She used to wear it all the time but now it requires a special occasion to bring out the royal garment.

W. L. Reese, 26, of Davis, was arrested by El Cerrito traffic officers on Sunday morning and is being held in lieu of $200 bail awaiting hearing on charges of driving while drunk.

JOBS REFUSED, 175 MEN ARE DENIED RELIEF

MARTINEZ, Dec. 4—Approximately 175 men who have been on the county's indigent rolls have either failed or refused to go to work under the civil works administration highway program. Mrs. Ruth McCord, director of the county social service bureau, revealed today.

As a result they have been cut from the county's relief rolls at the order of the board of supervisors.

"We have been given a myriad of excuses when workers have been sent to interview those who either failed or refused to go to work," Mrs. McCord said. "The supervisors have given strict orders that such refusals be followed by cutting those indigents from the relief rolls."

Officials expressed the belief that the demands of families will force some of the men to take the employment offered them.

Until December 1 jobs to be filled on highway projects, 1786 of them, were given to men on the county's indigent rolls. Since that time jobs have been filled from the federal re-employment service lists. Labor assignments were being made today by Morris Hoffman, local registrar for the re-employment service.

Trial Of Leader Of Strike Is On

VASILIA, Dec. 4—UP—Testimony was considered and final arguments started today in the trial of Pat Chambers, leader of a recent cotton strike, on charges of criminal syndicalism.

Chambers was accused of inciting violence when he addressed a crowd of strikers at Pixley, Calif., a few minutes before two strikers were slain in a clash with cotton growers. Chambers and his witnesses held he urged strikers to use violence only to protect themselves.

Your Good Health

By CLAUD N. CHRISMAN, M.D.

Fever and Cold Sores Need Special Treatment To Prevent Infection

HERPES facialis is quite a long name for a simple fever blister, but the patient who has it doesn't think the name is sufficient description. He would use something much stronger. It is an eruption of small blisters, or vesicles, around the red border of the lips, corners of the nostrils or eyes. It manifests itself suddenly in severe itching, throbbing and burning with tension at the edges or corners of the lips. Little vesicles appear, which rapidly enlarge and run together and form a large bleb with a reddened base. These blisters contain a clear fluid which soon dries up, if not ruptured, and in a few days scales off and the red spot gradually disappears.

DR. CHRISMAN

The eruption may spread entirely around the lips and out onto the cheek or down over the chin. The tissues are hot, throbbing and painful. The skin is swollen and any effort to smile or use the lips causes tension and often cracking and deep fissures may result. The blisters do not rupture of themselves, but if ruptured they may become infected and then we have that added to our discomfort with prolongation of the condition. They may also appear on the mucous membrane of the mouth, due to some systemic disturbance. These blisters rupture and leave small ulcers that resemble thrush and do not heal readily, unless painted with nitrate of silver or alum.

COLD sores occur most frequently in children and young adults and more often in girls than boys. Certain individuals are predisposed to them and if so they suffer from frequent recurrences. Any local irritation, such as cold wet winds, hot sunlight, and salt air, can cause them. They frequently start with a slight chilliness, with some stomach disturbance, or a slight cold. They follow various febrile conditions, such as bronchitis, pneumonia or malaria. Often in severe conditions of this kind they may indicate that the patient's condition is serious.

HERPES is apparently a destructive disturbance of the small nerve filaments of the skin, which cause the death of the outer skin and inflammation of the deeper layers. The irritation may be local or constitutional. The tension and burning are stopped by puncturing the blisters, but care should be used to prevent infection. To prevent development, spirits of camphor or camphor ice is of service. Calamine lotion, or a one per cent solution of potassium sulphid is very helpful.

THE blisters are open and the skin commences to crack. It is wise to cover the surface with something to exclude the air, such as compound tincture of benzoin which leaves a coating or benzoin and protects the surface, or paraffin, a layer of flexible collodion over the fissures which prevents tearing them open by motion of the lips.

ANOTHER herpes common form of herpes is zoster or shingles. It comes from a different source than the other forms and it is due to inflammation of a cutaneous nerve and follows that nerve or group as it spreads. It is very similar in appearance to fever blisters, but it does not appear on the lips. More frequently it travels around the ribs, following the intercostal nerves. Most cases appear on the trunk of the body, but it is not uncommon on the face, particularly above the eye and may even attack the eyeball and cause serious damage.

IT USUALLY follows some irritation of a sensory nerve or exposure to cold draughts. It is almost always confined to one side. In older persons and in those in poor physical condition it is exceedingly painful, as the underlying condition is a neuritis. The treatment is rest, tonics, sedatives and sometimes opiates, local soothing applications and exclusion of the air. Melted paraffin sprayed over the surface gives great relief.

The soup for the invalid should be cooked, then thoroughly chilled, so that all the fat will congeal and can be removed in its entirety. Any beads of fat will detract from the palatability of the soup besides being difficult to digest.

EXERCISE WILL HELP YOU GET PLUMP FIGURE

By JACQUELINE HUNT

THE Mac West fashions that have been sweeping the country by storm, in the past few months are causing consternation among women whose figures just won't seem to fit into slender-waisted, broad-shouldered, romantic costumes. Training the too thin or the too plump figure into the ideal proportions called for is a real achievement.

MISS HUNT

Thinness of body is really the more serious problem of the two since building up the body is rather slow process of dieting — and then there is no guarantee that the extra pounds will appear where you want them to. For the plumper woman, foundation garments and girdles will often pull the figure into shapeliness. Exercise, however, is the real controlling agent if you wish to fit into hour-glass fashions.

Posture another snag in the way of Mac West fashions. After years of wearing mannish clothes, dieting and turning figures into dashing, nonchalant boyish lines, shoulders have acquired disastrous habits. Many of them sag or droop and others are as stiff and expressionless as though they were facing some hopeless task. Exercise, dieting and shapeliness should set on a straight line with the backbone, yet not seem stiff or unnatural. Keep them hanging free from the neck, easy and graceful. Here, too, exercise seems to be the only way to put them to rights.

The exercise that is simplest seems to be the most constructive. Sit perfectly straight and move both shoulders, backward and forward in a rotary movement. After a few minutes, stop and exercise first one shoulder and then the other one in exactly the same way.

For keeping the waistline trim the best idea is to join the nearest gymnasium or Y.W.C.A. to pull off the excess flesh. If you can try stunts on a horizontal bar or twist your body while suspended in midair you will use all of your muscles and make your waistline slender and graceful. If it is impossible for you to use a gymnasium, then use this bending exercise:

Stand erect with the hands on the hips. Take a deep breath and bend the head to the left side and toward the floor swinging your body in the opposite direction, making a curve something like a horseshoe. Hold it a minute, straightening up and bend in the opposite direction. After your body has limbered up, sit on your heels, rotate your torso around your hips, rapidly. Hold your body for a strong diaphragm, slender waistline and high firm breast. Certain deep breathing strengthens certain muscles and it is worth trying. Exercises using the arms are also good for developing the busts and expanding the chest. And here is another exercise for the chest and shoulders:

Stand with your back firmly against the wall in a corner of the room. Have your arms on a level with your shoulders and try to push your body out of the corner. Resist the impact with your chest, pushing it well toward the wall. Relax when you feel tired. Put a lot of pep and energy into your exercises if you want them to do any good. All to often a woman will go through her exercise routine without really straining a muscle. It takes energy, will power and persistence to really benefit from exercise; that is why games or physical education classes are so much more apt to give results. The elements of play and competition make you unconsciously strain and use every muscle in your body.

Along with the feminine curves, a peaches-and-cream complexion is needed to top off the tantalizing new creations. Bleaching creams and lotions are becoming more popular and cosmetic colors tend to be a little paler in coloring. Whatever you do get your skin clear and soft and you will be ready for whatever this backward trend may bring.

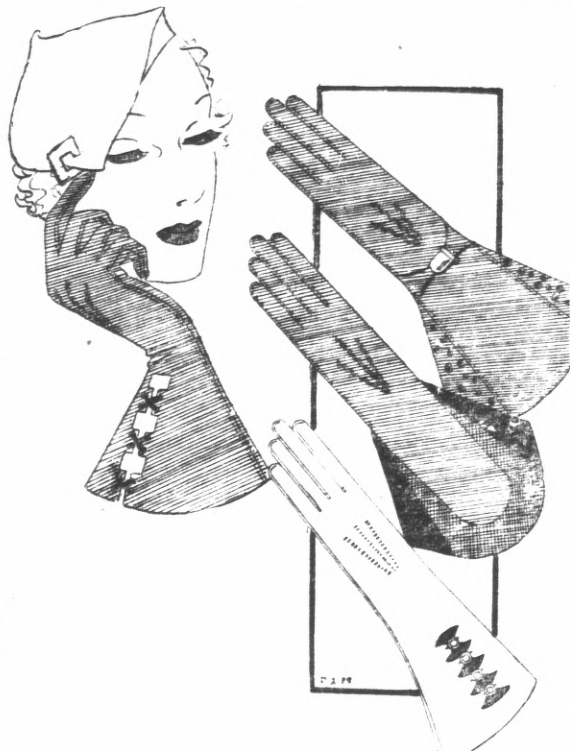

Washing Delicate Lace

When washing delicate lace, first put the lace to soak for half an hour in cold water and borax, using one tablespoonful of borax to one pint of water. Quite a good way of washing fragile lace is to take it on to a piece of flannel and then wash by squeezing in warm soapy water until quite clean, then rinse. If the lace is cream the final rinse should be weak tea or coffee. When nearly dry remove the lace from the pieces of flannel and iron them very carefully on the wrong side over flannel.

Another way of washing small pieces of lace is to put them into a bottle filled with soapy water and shake vigorously until quite clean. Then rinse in the same manner.

... SPEAKING OF STYLE ...

On the figure a lacing effect in red leather straps supports the equestrian style of the blouse; the blouse is beige knit with square cut-out holes.

Bending down from the top, the strap waist style in beige leather has a cut-out perforated pattern in the side flares. A three-color treatment in beige with panels of red and brown widens the waist.

At the bottom, a white knit blouse with cut-out patterns in black patent and tiny red buckles in the center of each one.

New York—One must have one's own sort of costume. That is, if one goes about society at all. As usual, however, the dress that is not too elegant to don after breakfast and to keep on until bed time is the ideal type. It is easier to find that type of dress than one might suppose. Easier than usual too, for everyday clothes are allowed a little more leeway and dinner dresses are tried down by having sleeves.

Hands Jacket

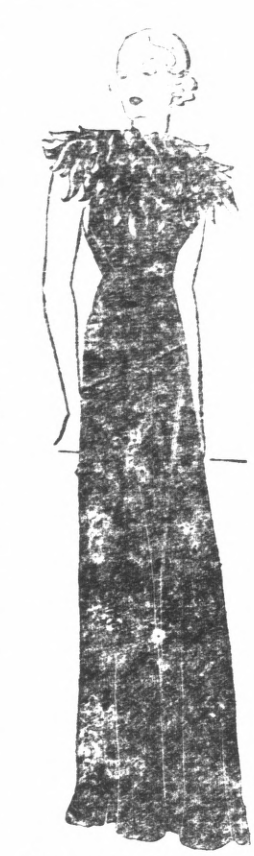

The separate jacket is the new thing. It goes on over a dress or blouse and without sleeves and in a stiff fabric forms it into a perfectly good, if slightly formal daytime dress.

These jackets may be in the same fabric of a contrasting one. Speaking generally, the soft, thin, through-out costume seems to be gathering in momentum, probably because it is apt to be the most flattering type.

These are the meliority days all right for the fortunate woman who has luxurious ideas about dress and can go out little toward satisfying them.

Veggie of Simplicity

It is gratifying to find in Paris that the new dress is simple. Before it is quite an achievement. These days of actually dressed-up, looking at them and their wear for at fashion shows, but when it comes to personal selection there are being some extremes. To this day, a dress is being worn which is a thing to be worn very much and for ever so many things.

Lord Lytton Upholds The Traditions of His Famous Family

THE voluminous report of the Lytton Commission on Manchuria was a very significant document. With its adoption by the League of Nations, Japan was forced to withdraw from the League. The Manchurian inquiry was the latest and perhaps the most arduous of a series of official responsibilities in the career of the Earl of Lytton, scion of an ancient British line.

As a member of the commission, Lord Lytton made every effort to live up to his brilliant family record. His grandfather was Bulwer-Lytton, the renowned author, and his father was that first Earl Lytton who served as Viceroy and Governor General of India. Ambassador to Paris and who won recognition as a poet under the pseudonym of "Owen Meredith."

The present Lord Lytton was born at Government House in Simla, India, in 1876, shortly after his father entered the viceroyalty. The family remained in India for the four-year term, after which young Lytton returned to England for his schooling. His career at Eton and Cambridge, included the usual cricket, football and racquet, as well as participation in college dramas.

To this day, Lord Lytton remembers his greatest success in the field of dramatics in a play called "Mendacity" written by his own grandfather.

When he completed his studies at Cambridge, Lytton traveled for several years in Germany, France and Italy, later becoming private secretary to George Wyndham in Ireland. Subsequently he served as Under-Secretary of State for India, Governor of Bengal, Civil Lord of the Admiralty and Acting Viceroy of India. He was also British Commissioner for Propaganda in France, and acted as leader of the Indian delegation to the eighth and ninth assemblies of the League of Nations.

Early in 1932, Lord Lytton announced that the high cost of maintenance was forcing him to vacate Knebworth, the family's 5,000-acre estate at Hertfordshire, which had been occupied for hundreds of years. In 1926, economic pressure had caused the sale of a selection from the contents of Knebworth House, and with things going from bad to worse, Lord Lytton declared he might open the turfed Elizabethan home, which he was leaving, to sightseers at a shilling a "right."

While journeying through the Far East in search of data for his Manchurian report, Lord Lytton not only interviewed "big men" connected with the Manchurian tangle, and ploughed, with his fellow commissioners in the investigation, through reams of controversial data, but also had the dubious honor of being transported to a hospital in an airplane, when a victim of a stubborn internal infection.

MODES AND MANNERS

QUESTION: "I have received an invitation to a wedding. How should the letter of acceptance be worded? The bride's people are sticklers for form, and I want to do the correct thing."

ANSWER: If the invitation is for the church wedding only, no reply is expected. Acknowledgment must be made, however, to an invitation to a reception or wedding breakfast. This must be written by hand and should follow the spacing of the engraved invitation. The following form is correct:

Mr. and Mrs. John J. Smith
Accept with pleasure
Mr. and Mrs. Henry T. Jones' kind invitation for
Tuesday, the first of November

QUESTION: "Who should make the toast at the dinner which my brother and I are giving for our parents in honor of their silver wedding anniversary. I am older. It has been suggested that we ask our father's only brother to make the toast."

ANSWER: It is the custom for the oldest child to make the toast. If your uncle wants to make a little speech in honor of your parents, it would be more in keeping with his position in the family.

MOST OF US DO THE THINGS WE PREFER TO DO

By MARIAN MAYS MARTIN

WE ALL have our own particular pet theories, and one of mine is that most of us believe, and find time to do what we really want to do.

It seems only human to accept a fact what fits in with our schemes. The religions that give us the greatest comfort are those we embrace. The friendships from which we get the most are those that we believe to be real.

Those that we believe to be real friendships. We choose to believe in these people. Even though someone with reasoning powers, unaffected by their glamour, attempts to point out that these dear friends are not all we think them, we refuse to believe them. Why? Because we do not want to. We want to believe they are what we want them to be.

TO REJECT a theory means that we do not want to believe what we want to believe. Cause it is not so. Accepting an unpleasant truth is nothing like as easy as accepting a pleasant half truth or even an untruth. Sometimes one hears someone say "I sincerely hope it is true, because I hate to believe it, but I do honestly believe that it is the truth."

NOT many of us do that, however. We prefer to construct our own idea of what is true, and can always be relied upon to build up a pleasant and comfortable theory. That is, unless we have some reason to believe, after all, it is rare. Most of us are not inclined to hair shirts. We believe what we want to believe. Unless, of course, one is of the type who believes that they are told unreservedly and never attempts to think things out for themselves.

GIVEN any intelligence at all, however, one can hardly help coming to some conclusions based on actual experience. Life has a way of teaching even the dumbest of us. Those are the truths that are driven home and accepted, even against one's will. Young and old, we seem inclined to follow a natural bent, and even though there are obstacles strewn in the path, if the desire is strong enough, the obstacles will be overcome.

IN THE same way we find time and a way to do the things we want most to do. Even in the most crowded days we are able to find time to do something that we want very much to do. It may be to write a letter, or read a book, or look for a new hat, but somehow it is done, if we really want very much to do it.

WHEN anyone says, "I really have not had time to do so-and-so," the chances are rather against it not being strictly true. Naturally, circumstances often make it difficult to follow one's natural bent, but usually we make an effort to do so, and the chances are that we actually do the thing we want most to do. If one's inclinations are strong enough, there is bound to be a way, and this by no means applies to love, which is credited with always finding a way. It applies to plenty of other desires as well.

IT MAY seem absurd to say that one can accomplish anything one starts out to do, but it is by no means impossible. One first must have a strong enough urge or desire to accomplish it, so that the price one has to pay does not seem too much to pay. And, naturally, there will be a price. The price must be paid for a chance as well as a dance.

Timely Tips

A clever way to use chintz that has a large colorful design is to cut the material in wide scallops and use in narrow widths at the sides of the window and across the top as a valance. In this way a single width of the material may be utilized to make a pair of curtains, for only half of a single piece is needed for each side. The effect is unusual and most attractive.

No matter how clean your hands look, wash them before starting to sew on a delicate article. The sewing is inclined to make the hands perspire and the slightest grime will quickly show on the material.

WHY NOT FISH FOR A CHANGE?

By JUDITH WILSON

FISH is so moderate in price when compared with meat—and it is so easily and quickly prepared that one who is an alert homemaker does not serve it more often. Let's pause a moment and consider its possibilities. Most fish is rather bland in flavor, so you will bring out its roteness by combining it with other properly seasoned foods.

Vegetables With Fish

Crisp colorful vegetables of decided flavor give you pleasing contrast. The new Brussels sprouts, beets with a sharp sauce, broccoli, mashed yellow turnips, stuffed baked or grilled tomatoes, cucumbers raw in sauces or cooked, green salads, relishes and lemon are all excellent accompaniments for baked, broiled or boiled fish. Boiled fish is usually accompanied by a sauce such as Hollandaise, egg or parsley, cucumber sauce or sauce tartare.

Canned and Packaged Fish

Many women claim that fish is not so easily obtainable as meat and hence does not appear on their menus so often. But this is hardly a satisfactory answer in view of the many kinds of fish available. The canned and packaged dried fish are practically non-perishable and are to be found in any good food store. Fish fish, however, is perishable and should be purchased only a short while before time to serve. A good fish market keeps the fish packed in ice until they are sold, or keep them in a refrigerator.

Preparing Fish

How much fish to prepare is another problem to women who are not familiar with preparing and serving fish. When there is no waste, as for instance in fillets, one pound of fish will serve four. If there are bones, skin and tail to be considered, allow one pound of fish to each two persons.

Buy fish when it is most plentiful in your local markets. In most of the smaller cities, Fridays or toward the end of the week is the best time to buy their silvery, fresh offerings. Usually fish is cleaned and boned at the market, so that all the housewife has to do is to wash the fish quickly and dry. The meat should be free from any clots of blood or other foreign material before cooking; further preparation depends on the method of cooking.

Fish Easy to Cook

Fish requires only a short cooking period—five to seven minutes for broiling or frying, twenty to thirty minutes for baking. One test for the "doneness" of fish is to test it with a fork and when it separates easily or flakes it is done. The larger fish are usually cut into fillets or steaks for broiling while the smaller fish—those weighing around three pounds or so—are stuffed for baking, or sometimes boiled.

White Meated Fish

White meated fish in general contain very little natural fats and so they are best when broiled and basted frequently with butter or when they are

Shellfish also deserves a more important place on home menus. They may be served as first courses, in salads, in sandwiches or as main courses in numerous appetizing combinations with other foods.

Home-Making

By ALINE STERN

For stuffed celery try to select pieces of uniform size. Stuff with a mixture made of hard eggs, celery, olives and mayonnaise.

Stuffed celery may be served as an hors d'oeuvre or as main dish with soup.

A savory hot dish can be made by stuffing celery with a mixture of cream cheese and anchovy paste.

Make your own canapés, using rounds of toast, thin triangles or any fanciful shape you choose. Toast the bread on one side only, and use the toasted side for spreading minced seafoods and lemon juice, caviar or what have you.

To decorate the centers of canapés cut stars and beads from pimento or green pepper, both. Or sprinkle a little chopped egg or chopped parsley over the top or supply the finishing touch by adding a dab of cream cheese or sliced olive.

CURING A CHILD OF LYING HABIT

By JANE HERBERT GOWARD

THE parent who gives a child a wrong idea of what I teach you today, you will get plenty of it. Not teaching him to tell the truth. Rather, he is stressing the urgency of why the child must not let himself get caught at lying. Punishment, indignation or threats or disapproval will get us nowhere. To cure a child of lying, we must make it possible for him to tell the truth.

It is possible to show that means that we must show that we want him to tell the truth. And of course, we ourselves must be truthful in dealing with him so that he may have a clear understanding of just what it is that we want. It is the way of children to answer their parents' expectations in matters of behavior. It is also their way to pattern themselves after us. If we are hypocrites and try to lead one by practice deception toward outsiders, it is well-nigh certain that he will do the same.

How Point Is Proved

In dealing with lying in children, the wise thing is to convey the idea that we "know." Show a child that you are not fooled, if you can see through his deception. Laugh it off, and try to make him see the joke, too, so that you can laugh it off together. In this way there will be no hard feelings. After all, the chance is overwhelmingly in his favor that he meant no harm. Children experiment with various types of behavior during the process of growing up. Assume that he merely was taking a chance and needs to be shown that it won't work. This more than anything will establish lying as undesirable.

Look for motives behind a child's fabrications. If a child lies to put himself across, it is not a matter to be taken lightly. Behind such lying is a serious problem, maybe a sense of inferiority. It may be that we do not praise him or encourage him sufficiently. Or it may be that he is completely eclipsed by a more brilliant or beautiful child in the family. He lies about himself to attract attention. Remove the cause and you have begun to affect a cure.

Matter of Motive

Lying in itself is not more serious than other major behavior problems. All children try it out at some time. Either they are carried away by imagination, or the lie is brought about by force of circumstances, as in the case of lies prompted by jealousy, resentment or fear of punishment.

Home-Making

By ALINE STERN

For stuffed celery try to select pieces of uniform size. Stuff with a mixture made of hard eggs, celery, olives and mayonnaise.

Stuffed celery may be served as an hors d'oeuvre or as main dish with soup.

A savory hot dish can be made by stuffing celery with a mixture of cream cheese and anchovy paste.

Make your own canapés, using rounds of toast, thin triangles or any fanciful shape you choose. Toast the bread on one side only, and use the toasted side for spreading minced seafoods and lemon juice, caviar or what have you.

To decorate the centers of canapés cut stars and beads from pimento or green pepper, both. Or sprinkle a little chopped egg or chopped parsley over the top or supply the finishing touch by adding a dab of cream cheese or sliced olive.

QUESTION: "I have received an invitation to a wedding. How should the letter of acceptance be worded? The bride's people are sticklers for form, and I want to do the correct thing."

ANSWER: If the invitation is for the church wedding only, no reply is expected. Acknowledgment must be made, however, to an invitation to a reception or wedding breakfast. This must be written by hand and should follow the spacing of the engraved invitation. The following form is correct:

Mr. and Mrs. John J. Smith
Accept with pleasure
Mr. and Mrs. Henry T. Jones' kind invitation for
Tuesday, the first of November

QUESTION: "Who should make the toast at the dinner which my brother and I are giving for our parents in honor of their silver wedding anniversary. I am older. It has been suggested that we ask our father's only brother to make the toast."

ANSWER: It is the custom for the oldest child to make the toast. If your uncle wants to make a little speech in honor of your parents, it would be more in keeping with his position in the family.
